B. Short Bio

I hold a PhD in Human Rights (University of Deusto), where I develop a research with CAPES scholarship on the Basque Diaspora in Argentina focusing on Long Distance Nationalism, Transnationalism, Social Media, Cyberculture, Imagined Communities, the transatlantic and online relationship between Homeland politics and the political activity of left-wing Basque nationalist groups in Argentina and the appropriation of social media and TIC's by minorities and nationalist groups for political engagement.

I hold a degree (BA) in International Relations at Pontifical Catholic University of São Paulo (from where I received a honourable mention award for my scientific initiation project in 2009 on [cyber] geography with PIBIC-CEPE/PUCSP funding) and an MA in Communication with full scholarship by FAPESP (the São Paulo state government foundation) focusing on Basque Diaspora, Social Media, Deterritorialisation and Identity studies.

I'm also a freelance journalist specialised in international relations and conflicts, migration, human rights, Brazilian and Spanish politics (in particular Basque and Catalan politics) published by Al Jazeera, World Politics Review, PRI, Foreign Policy, The Intercept Brasil, Vice, Common Space, The Brazilian Report, Red Pepper, among other news outlets.
